

ABSTRACT

A method for providing time information to user devices in a wireless network includes configuring transmitters in the wireless network based on the time zone in which they are located. Each transmitter may then transmit a frame, such as a synchronization frame, that includes information that may be used by a user device to identify a time zone in which the user device is located.